

GOAL ORIENTED TEAMWORK IN THE WORKS COUNCIL

Take the Football Test!

Insight into the team roles and the team profile of the Works Council

A division of tasks that suits the talents in the Works Council

Training to achieve Works Council goals

Working in the Works Council is teamwork. A Works Council works like a football team. There are usually a few WoCo-members at the front. Other WoCo-members have a clear overview, can run fast or finish off. A Works Council often has multiple goals. Everyone's talents can be used to achieve more as a Works Council.

The Works Council can work together in a goal-oriented way if everyone can use their talents.

Our Team Roles Test 'The Football Test' provides your team with a quick and playful insight into the best division of tasks and game strategy for your Works Council. The insights are easy to remember and can be applied in practice directly.

Works Council Team Training with the Football Test

Prior to the Works Council Training, the members take the online team roles test 'The Football Test'. During the training, the Works Council discovers how the most important goals of the Works Council can be achieved by making optimal use of the different team roles. The Works Council discusses how the roles are divided and how the members can strengthen each other. The Works Council puts these insights into practice, using active exercises and relevant topics. With the insights from the test, the Works Council learns how to best work together on requests for advice and how to make meetings more effective. With the test results in hand, the Works Council makes concrete agreements to improve cooperation. For example, the Works Council can distribute the roles and tasks in a way that fits the talents and ambitions.
